THE EVIL OF THE DALEKS

PART 7

The Daleks are infected with the Human Factor and a devastating civil war breaks out on Skaro.

Season 4 Episode 43

First Broadcast: 1 July 1967

The TARDIS is revealed. "You will take the Dalek Factor," the Emperor says. "You will spread it through the entire history of Earth!" The Doctor is absolutely horrified. "No! You can't make me do it!" he shouts. "You will obey," the Emperor responds.

The Doctor, Jamie, and Waterfield are reunited with Victoria, Kemel, and Maxtible in the holding cell. The ruthless businessman is still obsessed with his dream: "The transmutation of metal into gold," he whispers to himself. The Doctor plays his recorder as he thinks. Jamie believes Maxtible's goal is only "an old wives' tale," but the Doctor disagrees and thinks that it may be possible. Maxtible insists that he will achieve his aim. "The Daleks promised me!" he shouts. Jamie becomes incensed by the greedy man's rantings and attacks him. The cell door slides open, and a Dalek glides in. "You will not harm this human being, or you will be exterminated," the Dalek warns Jamie. The Dalek leaves. Maxtible consults his calculations on a notepad. Waterfield asks him to consider helping them try to escape but Maxtible furiously rejects his request.

Victoria sits next to the Doctor and asks him what he is thinking. "I'm trying to puzzle out a problem, Victoria," he says. "The Daleks say I'm going to do something for them – something I would rather die than do." Victoria looks at Maxtible across the room, still working feverishly at his calculations. "Perhaps they think you're like him," she suggests. "Oh, the Daleks know," the Doctor says. "The Daleks know me well enough by this time." Victoria wonders if the Daleks will try to persuade him. "No, no, it isn't that either," the Doctor responds. "You see, there isn't a persuasion strong enough – not even the offer of all the lives in this room."

A Black Dalek reports to the Emperor that the experiment is ready. It is ordered to proceed. The Black Dalek returns to the laboratory. "Discontinue work," it tells the other Daleks. "Why?" a Dalek asks. "Who spoke?" the Black Dalek replies, the fury obvious in its voice. "Who questioned a Dalek command?!"

In the cell, another Black Dalek shows Maxtible a container of liquid metal. A process begins, and its atomic weight changes. "Gold!" Maxtible shouts. "Iron into gold! I told you it was possible!" The others look on. "The machine is yours," the Black Dalek states as it departs. The Doctor tries to warn Maxtible away from the machine, but he ignores him. Maxtible is trapped in an energy field as he passes through an archway. The Black Dalek returns and gives Maxtible orders. He blindly obeys, his eyes suddenly vacant. "They've turned him into a Dalek!" Jamie exclaims. "Yes," the Black Dalek replies. "The Dalek Factor." The Doctor points at the Black Dalek. "Is that what you want me to do to the people of Earth?" The Black Dalek stares at the Doctor. "We know you will obey."

The Emperor is told that a Dalek has questioned an order. "Then it was one of the test Daleks," it says. "Find it immediately!"

Time passes, and the Doctor and his friends fall asleep in their cell. Maxtible enters and uses his hypnotic skills to lure the Doctor through the archway. Jamie shouts a warning, but it is too late. The Doctor is engulfed in the energy field. His eyes grow cold. He orders Jamie to stay where he is. Maxtible tells the Doctor that they will work on the Dalek Factor together. "I obey!" the Doctor replies. They leave the cell.

Maxtible shows the Doctor a machine that can transform the Dalek Factor thought patterns from a capsule into a steam. It will be sprayed into Earth's atmosphere. Maxtible leaves the Doctor to examine the machine, but as soon as he departs, the Doctor returns to the cell door and swaps the capsule in the archway for another one. He whispers to Jamie, telling him to bring everyone through the archway when he gives the word. A Black Dalek appears. The Doctor quickly pretends to be a human Dalek once more. "Take me to your Emperor," he says.

Jamie and the others wonder about the Doctor's strange behaviour. "How do we know we can trust him?" Jamie asks.

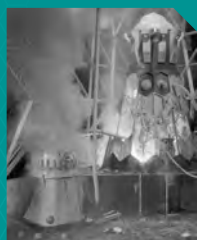

Maxtible and the Doctor tell the Emperor that they have failed to find the Dalek who questioned the command. "All Daleks must pass through the archway door," the Doctor says. "The Dalek with the Human Factor will then become a Dalek again." The Emperor agrees.

Jamie and the others watch as a long line of Daleks glide through the archway. The Doctor urges his friends to follow them. "It's all right – I've changed over the Factors! I used one of the capsules from my test Dalek! I've given them all the Human Factor!" He gives them directions to the tunnels and runs off. Jamie, Victoria, and Kermel move to escape, but Waterfield says that he must help the Doctor.

DALEK FINALE

The Evil of the Daleks was intended to be the last Dalek story ever made for Doctor Who, which is why it ends in such an apocalyptic fashion. Terry Nation had ambitious plans to give his creations their own TV series, filmed in colour, and sell it to an American network. While the BBC would retain joint copyright of the Daleks, they would be unable to feature them in Doctor Who without Nation's permission. However, Nation's plans to produce a pilot episode for the series fell through, so future Dalek appearances became a possibility again. While the cataclysmic final battle was being filmed in Ealing, an order arrived from head of drama Sydney Newman to provide some suggestion that the Daleks might not be quite as extinct as the story implied. A light was shown coming from inside the Emperor's casing in its final scene.

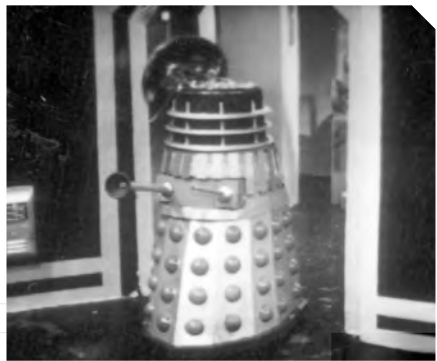

LAST BATTLE

The last battle between the two Dalek forces was a major set piece in Doctor Who's production history. The Evil of the Daleks was the first Doctor Who story to be entirely handled by the BBC Visual Effects Department. It was assigned to Peter Day and Michaeljohn Harris, with support from Len Hutton. Extensive filming took place at the BBC's Ealing studios beginning on 27 April 1967. Miniature shots using 15 of the Louis Marx Dalek toys were combined with a model of the Emperor's chamber. They were exploded or melted to the floor using charges. This was shot on silent 16mm film. The full-size battle was filmed on 16–17 May on 35mm film. Several lightweight Daleks were constructed from balsa wood and polystyrene and filled with wallpaper paste dyed green. They were rigged to fly apart when pyrotechnic charges were detonated. A less detailed version of the Emperor, made from balsa wood was used for the scene where it exploded. Ealing stagehands protested at the mess they were left to clean up.

The humanised Daleks rotate and sing, "Dizzy... dizzy... dizzy Daleks!" A Black Dalek confronts them and tells them to obey. "I will not obey," a humanised Dalek responds, and is exterminated by the Black Dalek. The other Daleks return fire and destroy it. The Doctor appears and urges them to follow him. Another Black Dalek arrives and tells them not to question its orders. The Doctor suggests that they ask the Emperor why they should always obey. One Dalek is cut down by the Black Dalek but is destroyed by the others. The converted Daleks head for the Emperor's chamber.

The Emperor's voice echoes across the Dalek city: "All Black Dalek leaders to Control! Exterminate all opposition!" The Daleks loyal to the Emperor swarm into its chamber.

"Destroy the Emperor, or be destroyed yourselves!" the Doctor yells to the humanised Daleks. Waterfield uses his coat to cover the eyestalk of a Black Dalek, but it throws it off. Waterfield shoves the Doctor out of the way as it fires. The Black Dalek is quickly destroyed, but there is no hope for Waterfield. As he dies, the Doctor promises to look after Victoria.

"Do not fight in here!" the Emperor orders but no Dalek listens. Dalek battles Dalek. The Emperor is caught in the crossfire as the humanised Daleks trade fire with the Black Daleks. "The Dalek race will die out completely!" the Emperor cries out as parts of its casing explode. "Obey your Emperor! Obey!" Its voice is drowned out by the fury of the battle.

Outside the city, Jamie, Victoria, and Kemel watch the Dalek city being consumed by fire. Maxtible approaches them, still under the Daleks' influence. He attacks Kemel, shouting, "Kill! Kill! Kill!" like a madman. Kemel is shoved off the cliff and falls to his death. Maxtible advances on Jamie but then hears a broadcast from the Daleks. He turns and walks back into the shadows and smoke.

The Emperor's chamber has been reduced to rubble. Pieces of Daleks are strewn everywhere. Explosions continue to erupt. The Doctor hides from Maxtible as he returns.

"The Daleks will live for ever!" Maxtible screams as he walks to his death.

The Doctor joins Jamie and Victoria on the cliff. Victoria learns that her father has died. "But he didn't die in vain," the Doctor says. "I think we've seen the end of the Daleks for ever." He tells Jamie that Victoria is coming with them. They hurry to the TARDIS. The Doctor pauses to look down at the Dalek city as it collapses into a mass of flames. "The final end!" he says, satisfied.

COMIC STRIP

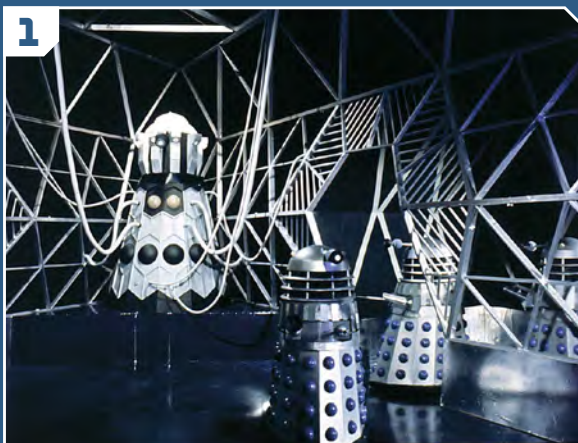

Some of the themes explored in the story had already appeared in 1965–66 in TV Century 21's Daleks comic strip, which had also been written by David Whitaker. The Emperor Dalek featured prominently in the strip, although its appearance was completely different. In the strip story Duel of the Daleks, one of the Emperor's underlings is a Black Dalek whose function is to destroy any Dalek that challenges the Emperor. In Eve of the War, a strange cloud affects the minds of the Daleks, turning them against each other. In Shadow of Humanity, the Emperor becomes deeply concerned when an unseen Dalek asks, "Why do we obey?" after it gives an order. The Emperor thinks, "That one word – 'why'. It could mean the destruction of the Dalek race!"

THE EMPEROR DALEK

It could be argued that the Daleks' moment of birth was not when they were developed in Davros' genetics laboratory, nor when they were first tested on the battlefield. The Daleks truly came to life only when they began to think for themselves.

That historic moment occurred in the Kaled bunker, when one specific Dalek gave the order to activate the Dalek construction line. Davros was taken by surprise and quickly attempted to regain control of his creations, but with no success. He had been judged obsolete and inferior, and was swiftly eliminated.

The Dalek who gave that first order had no name, but came to be called "Dalek Prime" by its kind. It was also Dalek Prime who spoke the words after the Daleks had been sealed inside the bunker by the surviving Thals and Kaleds: "We are entombed, but we live on. This is only the beginning. We will prepare. We will grow stronger. When the time is right, we will emerge and take our rightful place as the supreme power of the universe!" The Daleks had been crafted to be soldiers and adhered to the military ethic of a strict hierarchy. Due to the initiative it had shown, Dalek Prime became their leader.

Little is known about the years the Daleks spent buried beneath the surface of Skaro, but when they finally freed themselves, it was Dalek Prime who led the way. It directed the design and construction of the Dalek city. When the Daleks first encountered the traveller known as the Doctor, Dalek Prime was present when he was interrogated. When the Doctor revealed that he was an alien creature capable of travelling in time and space, Dalek Prime was listening.

The Daleks eventually moved out into the universe, exploring strange new worlds, seeking out new life and new civilisations, and exterminating them without mercy. The Dalek Empire was forged across the centuries in blood and fire. Other Daleks oversaw the running of the Empire while Dalek Prime remained on Skaro. Dalek Prime created a higher ranking of Dalek, naming them "Supremes" – each one identified by a black dome. The Supremes were each assigned a major military or intelligence-gathering operation and given the opportunity to run it in any way they chose.

In time, Dalek Prime evolved into a completely immobile state as it became the hub of all Dalek activity [1]. Its physical stature increased to 15 feet tall as its armour was strengthened and its internal mechanisms grew ever more complex. It also took on a new title: the Emperor Dalek.

The Emperor chose not to have a weapon fitted to its casing – it was the first Dalek to ever do so. This was a symbolic statement for all other Daleks to see. The Emperor had no need for personal protection because it was defended by the entire might of the Dalek Empire, and their combined strength could never be defeated.

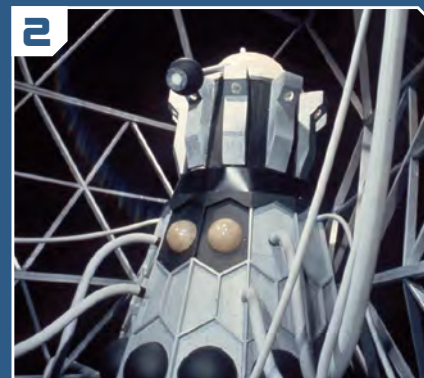

Several cables, each fitted with millions of nano-fibre links, were connected to the Emperor's casing [2]. These allowed it to maintain constant contact with every division of the Dalek Empire, monitoring every transmission and data entry across the galaxies. The Emperor could focus its attention on any piece of specific data in a few microseconds. The sensor globes fitted to the Emperor's casing were primed to absorb data from its immediate surroundings, as well as from the Dalek city itself.

The Emperor watched all Dalek activity from its chamber on Skaro, like a spider at the centre of its web. It analysed each mission, studying the tactics employed. It monitored all the decisions made by the Dalek Supremes. Some operations met with great success, while others failed with disastrous consequences. The alliance with leaders from other regimes in the outer galaxies was one such gambit – the Daleks' attempt to build a Time Destructor with the help of the human politician Mavic Chen resulted in total failure.

Over time, the Emperor detected a pattern forming. The Dalek campaigns most likely to end in defeat involved human beings. When Daleks came into conflict with humanity, they were often outwitted and overcome. Human strategies were difficult to predict: they behaved irrationally, often sacrificing their lives to help others. They also showed mercy to their enemies, sharing their resources and caring for them when they were wounded. The Emperor could not comprehend how such illogical behaviour could ever result in victory, but it decided to examine the qualities that humans possessed which Daleks did not.

The Emperor's exploration led to the creation of the Human Factor and the Dalek Factor: two diametrically opposed sets of mental patterns that could be projected into the minds of any human or Dalek. The Emperor intended to use the Dalek Factor in a plan to alter the history of humanity with the Doctor's unwitting aid. Instead, the Human Factor brought about the Emperor's downfall. Humanised Daleks swarmed across the city, questioning every order and battling the Daleks still loyal to the Emperor.

The Emperor died in the catastrophic destruction caused by the Dalek civil war [3]. Like all Daleks it had no concept of irony, and so could not appreciate how its own history had come full circle. The Emperor had begun its life by judging its creator obsolete, and its life ended when its own subjects ultimately came to the same conclusion.

Take the first ring, 92A (DEG), and note its orientation: the top of the ring is marked “DEG” (see inset). Position the ring with the “DEG” marking at the top. Fit the ring over the raised screw sockets on the upper right-hand side of the right side panel (89B). Secure the ring in place using four FP screws.

#92-02

Similarly, fit three more silicone rings (92A) over the lower three sets of raised screw sockets. Again, the “DEG” label should be at the top. Fix each ring in place with four FP screws.

#92-03

Similarly, fit another ring, 92A (DEG), over the raised screw sockets on the skirt holder at the top left-hand side of panel 89B. Check that the ring is correctly oriented, with the “DEG” marking at the top. Secure the ring in place using four FP screws.

#92-04

Fit three more rings (92A) over the remaining three sets of raised screw sockets protruding through panel 89B, ensuring that the “DEG” label is at the top. Secure each ring in place using four FP screws.
